The requested Dell computers are the established standard for IHS/HHS, crucial for meeting federal security directives, streamlining acquisitions, and lowering the Total Cost of Ownership (TCO). Our standardization program simplifies IT management, reduces training needs, and ensures compliance with federal green initiatives (EPEAT).

Deviating from these proven models would introduce significant deployment delays and risks due to extensive testing and integration requirements for new hardware. Non-standard models also create long-term support challenges, increasing costs and technician time. For these reasons, it has been determined that this specific brand-name source is the only one that will satisfy the agency's requirements.

Key Reasons for Standardization Reasoning:

Security: To ensure that the proper security configurations are implemented as per Federal Government directives.

Efficiency: To streamline computer purchases and improve property management by reducing the number of custom computer hardware configurations being supported. New models require additional time to acquire potential software, incorporate these into the imaging model, and test and verify performance.

Cost: To reduce the Total Cost of Ownership (TCO) by controlling IT technologies, which includes the engineering of hardware and software, as well as reducing training.

Support: To avoid potential long-term challenges in supportability such as driver updates, software compatibility, and general technician support time.

Compliance: To incorporate Federal green initiatives (EPEAT) which have been built into current standard models.
